Col Wolford's Oratory.

Mr. Wolford, of Kentucky, is the talk ing member of Congress. The impulse to take the floor seems to be irresistable with him. Mr. Woltord commanded the First Kentucky Cavalry during the war. He was a border Unlun man, and by virtue of his strong war record he sits on the democratic oide, representing a mountain district which would naturally send a republican. There is nothing elegant in Mr. Wolfords appearance. His figure is stumpy and a long-skirted frock coat doesn't improve the outlines. A very fat face, which in repose is broadened by a grin, conveys tha impression that Mr. Woiford may be a humorist. This impression is dispelled soon after the Kentuckian gets the floor His style of oratory is the pethetic. Giva him the case of a loyal widow whose word pile meited away in the sixtias as the reeuit of the proximity of a camp. For two minutes Mr. Woiford talks with great gravity; then his arms begin to awing. Tha perspiration comes out in great drops, and rolle down his face. His voice quavera, and takes on the tramulo of the camp-meeting exhorter. At length be weepe. It seems as if he is about to be overcome with amotion Not so lie is now in his red heat, and he maintains it until the rap of the gavel informs blm that his time is up. Then the tears stop, the daep, rich color gradually recedes, the perspiration dries, the broad face expands with the happy look, and Mr Wolford is serons and at poace with all the world again. To see Mr. Wolford work himself up to the orator pitch and let himself down to his normal level without wrecking his auspanders is one of the features of the Forty uinth Con-

green. -[St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Brakeman's Melanchely Experience. "Talking about suddec changes in temperature," said a St. Paul brakeman; "Let me tell you of a little experience I had one day a few weeke ago. It was a nice, warm day, and I was out on my run, and was just congratulating myself that we'd got through on time this trip. We'd had tough times with snow and cold, and I was particularly pleased with the fine outlook on this occasion, 'cause I wanted to gat hours in time to lead thel prayer meeting', beln' as it was my turn. i'm a religiona man, you see, an' so you can place the utmost confidence in what I teli you. Weii, as I was a savin', it was a nice, warm, thawing day, and we were making good time l'retty acon, though, the train stopped, uniles from any atation, and I stepped out to see what the matter was. I noticed that it seemed elightly colder and I shivered a bit as I stood in the alush and water looking ahead where the engineer was fixing something about his machine. By the time the engineer had concluded his fixing. probably three or four minutes, I wee chilied through and waen't sorry to sea him jump into his cab and to hear the beil ring for etarting. I made a move to get on the train but it wasn't much of a move. In fact I was stuck. I could no more move my feet than if the court-house had been sittingon one of them and the City Hail on the other. You see while I had been standing in that water the temperature had suddeniy fallen, so that the water had turned to firm ice, and my feet were frezen fat. The train moved off without me, despite my cries, and I stayed there three hours and missed my prayer meeting. That hast all the andden changes in temperature I ever heard of, and you can het it was a cold day

Letter from a Colored Man. To the Faltter of the Interior Journal. I visited the Anchorage State Asylum this week and I was very much surprised to see how nicely everything was carried on by Superintendent H. K. Pusey. I taiked with a good many of the patients and they ail give the officers oplendid names. Anchorage has had a had name, but I think it le fast being redeemed under the present management. The fact that all the patients that I talked with thought a good deal of both the male and fem sle at tendents ied me to believe that they were weil cared for. I went to Anchorage to see my wife and I found that she wee getting along well, and her reason was almost rectored. The number of colored petients are 100. I did not yielt the white department, because I did not have the time. Colored attendants, Mr. Wesiey Anderson, Anderson Boone, Mrs. Luciuda Smith, Miss Anna Ford. I found them ail to be kind and friendly and I was confident that I was leaving my wife in good heads. CHARLEY STEWART. Respectfully.

In Memory of Little Annie Belle.

Oa the 14th of March, ere the sun iliumed the eastern sky, the angel of death entered the household of Mr. and Mrs. T. N. Pratt and claimed for its victim their darling little granddaughter, Annia Belle Holley, aged one year and five months. Annie Belle was horn Nov. 4th, 1884. She was the daughter of Engineer W. R. Holley and Isabelle Holley; elso granddaughter of Capt. and Mrs. J. W. Curter. As little nie was left motherless she (Annie) never knew the tender care of. a loving mother (who died a year ago the 27th of Feb.) We well know that she has received the best of care from the hands of ber grandmothers. No more will we see her pleasant countenance or hear her musical voice, but we can hope to meet her among those who have washed their robes and made them whiter than snow. Loving father and grandparents, God hath taken Annie Belle from thee for purposes known only to Himself, therefore mnrmur not, weep not, but remember that ile doeth all things well. The Lord giveth, the Lord hath taken ewey, blessed be the name of the Lord.

"She is not dead, but sleepeth; Eleepeth in Christ's fond embrace; Resting there quietly, sweetly, Watching the Savior's dear face.

They wept when they saw their darling Hid from their sight evermore, You wept, for their hearts were breaking.

And b'eeding at every pore. She was so young to leeve us, So hoppy and full of life;

The world was full of sunshine, No sorrow, or care, or sirife. Their life was so bright before them. No cloud had appeared in their skies, But now their pathway is shedowed, Oh, Annie, they mourn for you sadiy, Though you're gons to the land ever fair; Sadly their oyes ever wandered To your desolate, empty chair.

O'ercent with sorrows and sighs.

Were you looking, dear Annie from heaven, When they lowered your form from their eyes! Did you know how their hearts were breaking? Did you hear their deep, mournful sighs?

Good-byo, then, dear one, torever; Theirdarling, their own true love, Too soon, ah, too soon did he call you To dwell with Him far above."

THE FANCHER TWINS.

When the earth was shadowed and palled in that great eclipse in the year 1755 terror seized fhe people, for nature seemed reversed, and a stifling calm came over all things, so that the beasts in the field gave frightened cries, and the dogs bayed, and the fowls, even at midday, sought their perches.

Just at that hour there had gathered in the Fancher homestead In Westchester county, New York, on the Hudson river, neighbors, kindly bent on ministering to one in the most sacred of all necessities. And when the midday shadow began to permeate the atmosphere, and to grow denser and denser, and the ghastly light revealed the other and unusual sights without, the neighbors sat crouched before the great fire in the livingroom, close together and speaking only in a lioarse whisper, casting half-averted glances from the window into the welrd light beyond. But one, a motherly matron, was in the lnner room, whence once the appeared with gloomy count-nance, saying: "It were better that it were dead, for this will blight

And the neighbors asked in whispers, not for the child, but for the mother, and the anatron replied: "She does not know that the sun was darkened when the baby came to us."

By and by the nintron came into the great room bearing a burden in her pillowed arms, and having lifted the blanket of soft wool, she permitted the friends to peer at the little

"Is it—loss it live?" one asked.
"Pity it, for it does. It is a boy, and he will be dark and flerce, and who knows what; for do you suppose that such as that which happened to the sun will not prevail over one who at that time came to us!" And the infant even then opened his eyes apon them. "He cloes not ery," said one.

'No, but his fists are doubled," sald another. "They always are; that signifies nothing," seald the mairon. "Aye, but not clenched and firm with rescistance like his."

"If he would cry I would like It," continued the first. "I doubt if he ever sheds a tear," said the anatron, who bore him upon her arm. Aud then the father came and looked for unany moments upon his first born, and at length he said: "His name shall be Daniel." the White Plains hills, the matron came again, bearing another burden gently, and, as she lifted the tip of the covering to let them see, she said. "Twas when the sun was shining brightly this one came to us, and he will be fair and gentle and comely, but the shadow of his brother's birth will be upon him all his days."

The women, when they saw this infant, said that his eyes were Fancher eyes-that is to say, were fairly blue; and his hair, which was like a little ray of sunlight, like his mother's and all her kin.

When the father had looked upon this one he said: "He shall be called David."

As they grew the people all agreed that rather than Daniel and David their names rnight better have been Esau and Jacob; for Daniel was dark, like some of the Indians who lived near by, and his head was sluggy, with thick, black hair. He was fierce and imperious, and gave promise to become a nilghty hunter, or else a warrior, for he talked of war and bloodshed, and before he was 10 years old dians to conquer. But David was gentle. He toved the farm and the cattle, but he cared swith Daniel When Daniel had come into possession of his strength his fame as a strong man spread | you mean me." far and near, and they sald that he had felled an ox with a blow, and had captured two robbers from the town below and held them with a grip of steel, each by an arm; and no one said yes or no to him until his desire was It for me?" first ascertained. But David they loved because of his centleness.

There fived in the town of Bedford, some eniles distant, Miss Persis Rowland, and it was said of her that, fair as all other maids were, there was none like her, and she knew iit, and was pleased thereat, and that she coveted not only admiration, but the acknowladgement of it, whereby many a staiwart young fellow had favored her wish to his

One day Miss Persis summoned one who obeyed her always, and said to him: "There is to be the great assembly of the year on St. Valentine's eve, and the sleighing is fine."

"That will be well, mistress. But whether the aleighing was fine or not the young feltows from miles around would come."
"No doubt. The winter is dull."

"Aye, but 'tis not that; and you know well mistress" why they come, and why, if you were not there, they would quickly de-

"But it tires me to see the same faces, with their staring, yearning eyes. There's no spunk in them. I hear of one below who, they say never even so much as lets his eye erest on a maid; not from abashment, but the whistle of her silke as she once passed close she cause he cares not for them, at all, being by him, looking up with serious face at him, an love with his own shadow-that is, his win brother. it would please me to set my ceye upon such a man."

"Ah, be never saw you, mistress, for if he had the brother would be forgot." "Have you seen him, what looks he like?

Is he strong and fierce, and does he scowl, and does he permit himself a beard!" "He is all these things, and all men seem to Mear him but the brother, and he says nothing

no the women." "If you wish to please me, as so often you massert you do, you will see that this strange being and his brother are present at the asseembly. The sleighing will be fine, I said." So it happened that the young man, being agreatly desirous of doing whatever might smake this woman smile even for an instant sipon him, with caution approached David, and at last won his promise that he and Daniel would attend the assembly. But when David and his brother talked about it, Daniel said: "You have said we would go: therefore we will. But why do they chatter so of this young woman? Is she unlike others? Have they not all eyes that they cast on young men, David, and do they not all pucker their lips that their emiles may seem more pleasing! Fools they be who are bewitched rhereby; but you have said we will go, and vee do what we say, David."

So, as the young men and women were engaged in the courtly minuet, in the great asseembly room, there came among them the Function twins. They stood side by elde in the further end of the room, where the light From the great burning logs revealed them cicarly. They were of an even height and mall, but one was musculiar and strongly built, and his face seemed in the dim light more swarthy than it really was, and his thick bein stood in sharest research as nature. black hair stood in shaggy masses, as nature had arranged it, and without the rigid dress-ing of the time. The other was light and fair as a maid, and there was a smile upon his faces, for the bright faces and the gay dresses and the twinkling of candles pleased him.

Miss Persis had seen them as they entered, and though with demure and graceful manmer she seemed occupied with the evolution of the dance, yet she saw them all the while, When the outilion was ended she summoned be allorer and said: "The dark one, that is Semi-Eleckly Interior Journal be. Why do you permit them to stend there? Will his brother be his partner in the naxt set! He must not. Why do you not bring him to me!"

And so the youth in stiff peruke and silken stockings and satin breeches, went to Daniel, and bowing, said: "Tisduil for you, I fear. "If so we can go as we came."

"But not until you have been presented?" "We came to see, not to be seen."
"He wishes to present you, Daniel," said his twin brother David. "Well, he may do lt." But the youth with some embarrassment perceived that Daniel had no thought of noving when David were by, and be thought how often he had heard it said: "The fair one is the other's shadow." But he led them both to the high-backed hair wherein the fair Persis sat; and though Daniel stood before her staring grinly at her without abashment, and David, with becoming humility, bowed fow beneath her beauty, yet she took no heed of the fair one, but spoke to the dark one only.

"We have heard of you, but we have never een you here before," she said. "Why is it!" "Because it has not been our wish," Daniel replied with grave dignity.

"It is a delight for us to see a strong man iere," she said. "A woman might almost ose her faith in men dld not such as you appear once an l awhile."

"My strength is my own, and David's What is it to you?" he said. "What to me! The pleasure of novelty.

They say there is a war brooding, and troops have fought already on Bunker Hill. It is that to me that gives me and all women sense of safety, for I now know that there are men fearless and brave, and quick to fight an enemy, and we shall, therefore, be safe. Ahl why was I a woman?" "You talk of strength. It is weak to bemoan your fate." "Would you not bemoan too had you been born without arms!" "If you were a man what would you do?" "Be strong and glory in it. If there were war, I would command an army, as you might, and if there were peace i would compel the homage and affection of every fair

"To command an army is well; to woo and vin is pastlme for puerile men."

"So ilttle do you know and realize the power of strength. The greatest victories that a man can win are those which enable him to woo and wed whichever of all the maids he ever saw that he desires. If she be proud he can subdue her pride, and that is a greater feat than winning a battle; and if she be valu Then, when the shadow on the earth had be can humble her vanity, and it she be selfish zone, and just as the sun was setting behind he can make her forget herself, and, if she be well favored above all other mails he can be conscious that, if he will, the beauty is for him, and that is a conquest of all other men.

As she said this she looked up at him, bend ng her graceful neck that she might obtain full view of his stern face, and compel him thereby to look upon her. And when he had perceived her face, and the beauty of it he did ot speak, but led her to the remote corner of the great room, and then unloading her arm turned so that he might stand amarely before her. He looked at her steadily for a moment, she not qualling. She asked at length: "What is it? Why do you look so flercely at me!"

"Because you spoke as you did, and I percelve now what woman's beauty is. Have you not more strength than I!"

"I? I stronger than you?" "Yes, you think you are. I think you may e, but you are subtle. Is that one form of strength! In there one of the men here, or whom you ever saw, who would not with joy obey you! And if that be so, is that not due Enad led bis brother far away in search of lu- to the very strength you just now complimeuted in men!"

"Then you dare not come alone." He looked half ungrily upon her a moment and then said: "I will come alone." "Now go and fetch your brother to me. He stands there now alone, looking with great eyes at you. Is there some intangible bond etween you?"

"My brother is myself and I am he." "Then bring him quickly, and leave us for while that I may perceive how Daniel acts in David's person, as I have already by your strange admission seen how David appears in Daniel's person,"

"You are a strange woman," said be, looking almost fiercely upon her with his eyes black as the ornaments of jet she wore, and reflecting hrighter light. But he brought David, and then stepped aside and watched that supple, slender figure as, on David's arm, she walked, as the swan sails, without apparent volition; and he saw how white and graceful her neck was, as it was revealed above the soft lace about it, and how like a grown her dark hair was guthered upon her head, twinkling like stars in winter's uight, with the jewels set there; and he could hear and he perceived that her feet in slippers, white and supple, did now and then peep from her skirt like little chicks that thrust and withdrew their heads from their mother's

"What is my strength and iletermination beside this power?" he thought. "I could crush, but this supple thing can compel.

While she was walking with David Miss Pursis had said: "Who would surmise that you and he were hrothers!"

"Why not?" asked David. "Have you never surveyed yourselves side y side in the mirror?" she asked.

Why should we do that! I think the mirfor belies, for no reflection would put out of my mind the conviction that I am like him and he like me. We cannot see ourselves." "But your brother is so flerce and gloomy and imperious." "Ah, that is but the other side of my-

"And you, shall I say it? They say you are gentle and kindly and peaceful."
"Ah, but that is the other side of him." "Being the complement of each other, to rether you make a man," she said. He laughed and she continued: "But you can not live always thus. There is a better omplement even than a brother."

"Teli me what you think it is!"

"A fair maid: and there will come the rea ization of this to you. But you are most unneighborly. We have never seen you be-fore. Come and be better friends. Come, for I want to talk with you more.

"We will come." "Not together. You would embayram ma. should not know to which I spoke. Come you the day after to-morrow, and pay me a little visit at my home. My father would be glad to know you," and she looked up pleasngly, with an arch smile, and not serious und demure as she had when she obtained Daniel's promise to come. So he promised

"Are you going supperless to hed!" asked his twin brother. "I have caten supper with friends," sald

David quietly.

Then until the winter frost were yielding to the summer sun Daniel and David ate and slept and worked together, but in silence, and almost every day one or the other went hurrying off toward the north, but never together.

One day after David had gone, Daniel an nonr later followed. He drove straight to the door of Esquire Rowland's mansion, and without ceremony entered, passing to the best room. There he saw David sitting beside the fair Persis, who had not heard Daniel without one word, arose and followed him. The girl sat there like one bewildered, speechless; and when at length her wits cathe she perceived that the brothers were far down the highway. "Oh, were there but one, and that one the lark one," she said, as she stood peering through the little window panes and watching until the twins had passed out of sight. Not a word did Daniel or David speak until they reached their home. Then Daniel "David, in this, as in all things else, we are agreed. You love the maid, as I love ber. If you hated her I should hate her. But though we may be one, we are to the world as two. We love her and must be content with that." "That is true, Daniei. She cannot cut the bond that binds us." "I love her as myself, David, and you me for we are indeed in all but body one. Therefore we must see her no more. And as in rien contrary passions pull them this way and that, so one of us may be overcome by our passion and visit the girl again. if so, whichever dow shall go to the other and confess and say: 'What shall I do! "There is reason and purpose in this pledge, Daniel, and we will make it." "David, if it is you who comes to me I shall say what I hope you will say to me if I foll,"

"And that is to end my life?"

"That is what It is." One day some weeks later Daniel came to David and led him to the glen that even to this day may be seen beyond the old house.

"David, I am a poor weakling. I have seen her again yesterday. You know our pledge," and here Daniei drew from his procket a pistol. David looked upon his brother with an agonizing glance, while Daniel stood before lm grim and flerce, and very dark. His hand was upon the trigger.

"I can't, I can't, Daniel," David said. "You can, for if I were in your place I ould and would command you to keep your pledge and do as I bid. There is no escape, but here," and he held up a weapon. "No, I can not hid you do lt, though 'twas our pledge," and David put his hands to his eyes and shuddered. "But, Daniel, there is another thing that can be done. The war has come. Washington is below. You shall enlist and be a soldier. Perhaps you will become a great commander, as you once felt sure you would."

"You tell me to enlist. I will do it." And that night Daniel quitted his home, and within three days was with Washington at Harlem. Early one morning the American forces, which Daniel had joined were up and preparing to move to battle. A stranger was passed in through the guards, and asked to be permitted to take part in the coming attack. It was David. A few hours after, and just before the advance was ordered the twins met. They both stood for a moment looking into each others faces. The strength of the one and the gentleness of the other had given place to a wild, pained look in the eyes

"Whence came you!" asked Daniel. "From her. I too have broken my pledge. and have come to die with you."

That night when the noise of the conflict was hushed the twin brothers lay side by side, the wild look in their eyes, had given place to a glassy stare.—Adapted from New Orleans

Civilization of the Hawaiian Islands. Those who still think of the Hawaiian slands as a land of half-civilized beings would e surprised to see the Items of the daily paper published there. The advertisements show every variety of profession and business car ried on by people whose names are unmistakably English, while from the local column we gian that the city of Honolulu has its base ball clubs, its circuses, its roller coaster—a contrivance only recently seen in New Eng-land—its opera (brought all the way from lian Francisco by a public subscription of $2,000), and last but not least in the evidence of civilization, a police court where the cus-tomary "drunks" and "assaults" are recorded each morning. Even the Chinaman there is palted and mocked by the boys in the streets as he is by their little Christianized brothers in America.-Chicago Times.

Salt and Alkalies of the West. A member of the geological survey says that Salt lake will be of great value in the near future, not only on account of the common salt it will produce, but also for the acdium sulphate it contains. The latter is acparated in a floculent precipitate by the cold weather of midwinter, and annually thrown up on the shore in enormous quanti-Mes. There are many other lakes in the fai west where an mexhaustible supply of commercial alkalies may be obtained at small cost, Mono iake, California, alone being estimated to hold over 78,000,000 tons of sodium carbonate.—Chicago Times.

Maine's Probistorie Shell Reaps. The immense prehistoric shell heaps of Damariscotta, Me., are being dug up and shipped to Boston to be ground into dust and wild as poultry food. These deposits, which are described in Ernest Ingersoll's census repart on American oyster industries, have long been an object of great interest to antiquarians.—Chicago Times.

USE HALL'S HAIR RENEWER.

It is a medicinal preparation, and, at the same time, an elegant and cleanly tollet article. its action upon the sculp is healthful. It nourlshes the glands which support the halr, and causes thin, dry fair to become thick, soft, and vigorous. It restores the color of youth to locks which have become fuded with age or disease; and relieves and cures lichling, eaused by numors of the scalp. Dr. George Gray, Nashua, N. H., writes! "It gives me pleasure to testify to the wonderful effects produced by Hall's Vegelable Sicilian Hair Renewer, as observed by me la very many cases,' IT WILL CERTAINLY BESTORE THE HAIR TO ITS ORIGINAL COLOR. It eleanses the head of dandruff, and leaves the hair soft, glossy, and beautiful." F. T. Sandheln, 1010 Sprnce st., I'hiladelphin, Pa., writes: "After unavallingly lrying a number of preparations to prevent my hair from falling out, an I, realizing that I was fast becoming bald, I tried, as a last resort, Hall's Halr Renewer. I have used only four bottles of the Renewer, and am perfectly satisfied that it is the best preparation in the market for cheeking the falling out of hair, invigorating the hair roots, and promoting a new growth."
